

8-15-2016

Dealing with Shifting Labor Employment Sands

David S. Sherwyn

Cornell University School of Hotel Administration, dss18@cornell.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <http://scholarship.sha.cornell.edu/chrreports>

 Part of the Hospitality Administration and Management Commons, and the Unions Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Sherwyn, D. (2016). Dealing with shifting labor employment sands. Cornell Hospitality Report, 16(18), 3-9.

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the The Center for Hospitality Research (CHR) at The Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Center for Hospitality Research Reports by an authorized administrator of The Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact hlmdigital@cornell.edu.

---

Dealing with Shifting Labor Employment Sands

Abstract

Changes in regulations and tighter interpretations of existing regulations engaged participants in 14th annual Labor and Employment Roundtable, hosted by the Cornell Institute for Hospitality Labor and Employment Relations. They also reviewed changes in union organizing rules. Two Supreme Court decisions dealt with the challenging application of accommodating workers' health and religious needs, while a new ruling by the National Labor Relations Board calls into question the supposedly arm's length relationship of employee leasing firms and their clients, as well as franchisors and franchisees. The NLRB also has shortened the campaign time for union elections. In one Supreme Court case, Young v. United Parcel Services, Inc., the Court pointed to a simple principle when employers implement policies for those with illness or medical conditions. Policies must be consistent with regard to how on-job and off-job health issues are treated, and the company's policy must not be driven by economic considerations. That is, the Court stated that an employer's denial of a light-duty assignment for an employee could not be based on cost or convenience. The case relating to religious accommodation also involved an economic hinge. In an earlier case, the Court had held that religious accommodations are limited to that which would have no more than a de minimus cost on the employer. In this case, EEOC v. Abercrombie & Fitch Stores Inc., Abercrombie had declined to hire a woman wearing a headscarf on the assumption that she would need a religious accommodation. The Court frowned on the idea that an employer would take religious accommodations into account when deciding whether to hire a person. The franchising industry is attempting to make sense of the NLRB ruling regarding joint employment, in which the board ruled that franchisors that maintain some kind of control over their franchisees' employees should be considered joint employers of those employees. This is a complicated matter, and the situation is still in flux. Finally, with regard to the telescoped union campaign ruling, these are supposed to benefit the unions. So far, however, there's no indication that the change has affected the overall outcome of union election campaigns.

Keywords

Cornell Institute for Hospitality Labor and Employment Relations, union organizing rules, Young v. United Parcel Services, Inc., EEOC v. Abercrombie & Fitch Stores Inc., franchising

Disciplines

Hospitality Administration and Management | Labor Relations | Unions

Comments

Required Publisher Statement

© Cornell University. Reprinted with permission. All rights reserved.

CIHLER Roundtable

Dealing with Shifting Labor Employment Sands

by David Sherwyn

---

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

David Sherwyn (BS, JD, Cornell University) is the John and Melissa Ceriale Professor of Hospitality Human Resources, professor of law at Cornell University's School of Hotel Administration, and director of the Cornell Institute for Hospitality Labor and Employment Relations. Dave is also a research fellow at the Center for Labor and Employment Law at New York University's School of Law and of counsel to the law firm of Stokes, Wagner.

From 2006-2009, Dave was the director of the Center for Hospitality Research at Cornell University (CHR). Prior to joining the School of Hotel Administration, Dave practiced management-side labor and employment law. Dave has published articles in, among others, Northwestern Law Review, Stanford Law Review, UC Hastings Law Journal, Indiana Law Journal, Berkeley Journal of Labor and Employment Law, Fordham Law Review, University of Pennsylvania Labor and Employment Law Journal, and Cornell Hospitality Quarterly. Dave annually teaches Business and Hospitality Law, a required class with more than 200 students, and Labor Relations in the Hospitality Industry, in conjunction with Cornell's

Industrial and Labor Relations (ILR) School. In his 17 years as a faculty member, Dave has received 15 Teacher of the Year awards. In 2014 he was named a Stephan H. Weiss Presidential Fellow—the most prestigious teaching award at Cornell University. Dave conceived of, organized, and hosted the CHR's first hospitality industry roundtable, and has hosted more than 20 Labor and Employment Law Roundtables, while other centers and institutes have hosted roundtables in the school's other hospitality disciplines

---

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Changes in regulations and tighter interpretations of existing regulations engaged participants in 14th annual Labor and Employment Roundtable, hosted by the Cornell Institute for Hospitality Labor and Employment Relations. They also reviewed changes in union organizing rules. Two Supreme Court decisions dealt with the challenging application of accommodating workers' health and religious needs, while a new ruling by the National Labor Relations Board calls into question the supposedly arm's length relationship of employee leasing firms and their clients, as well as franchisors and franchisees. The NLRB also has shortened the campaign time for union elections. In one Supreme Court case, Young v. United Parcel Services, Inc., the Court pointed to a simple principle when employers implement policies for those with illness or medical conditions. Policies must be consistent with regard to how on-job and off-job health issues are treated, and the company's policy must not be driven by economic considerations. That is, the Court stated that an employer's denial of a light-duty assignment for an employee could not be based on cost or convenience. The case relating to religious accommodation also involved an economic hinge. In an earlier case, the Court had held that religious accommodations are limited to that which would have no more than a de minimus cost on the employer. In this case, EEOC v. Abercrombie & Fitch Stores Inc., Abercrombie had declined to hire a woman wearing a headscarf on the assumption that she would need a religious accommodation. The Court frowned on the idea that an employer would take religious accommodations into account when deciding whether to hire a person. The franchising industry is attempting to make sense of the NLRB ruling regarding joint employment, in which the board ruled that franchisors that maintain some kind of control over their franchisees' employees should be considered joint employers of those employees. This is a complicated matter, and the situation is still in flux. Finally, with regard to the telescoped union campaign ruling, these are supposed to benefit the unions. So far, however, there's no indication that the change has affected the overall outcome of union election campaigns.

CIHLER Roundtable

Dealing with Shifting Labor Employment Sands

by David Sherwyn

 On Monday October 5, 2015, CIHLER held its 14th annual Labor and Employment Roundtable. The roundtable featured over 30 private practice lawyers, in-house counsel, VPs of human resources, faculty, and deans. In addition, over 200 students attended the event. The roundtable consisted of three main topics:

Two new Supreme Court accommodation cases—What do they mean, and how will they change practice.

Discussants: Barry Hartstein '73, of Littler Mendelsohn; and David Ritter '80, of Barnes & Thornburg;

Joint-employer doctrine—Where are we now and where are going. Discussants: John Gessner, of Front Burner Restaurant Group, and Gregg Gilman '85, of Davis & Gilbert; and

New NLRB organizing rules—Are they a game changer? Discussants: Paul Ades, of Hilton, and David Rothfeld, of Kane, Kessler.

John Ceriale, founder and president, Prospect Advisors.

The first session addressed the Supreme Court's decisions in Young v. United Parcel Services, Inc.,<sup>1</sup> and EEOC v. Abercrombie & Fitch Stores Inc.<sup>2</sup> Both cases dealt with accommodations for protected employees. In Young the issue revolved around pregnancy, and in Abercrombie the issue was religion. At the crux of each case is the fact that protections for religion, pregnancy, and disabilities all require accommodation. Religious (1964) and pregnancy (1973) protections, however, pre-date disability by such a significant amount of time that the term accommodations has acquired several different meanings, as interpreted by the courts. The EEOC has made it a priority to level this playing field, and Young and Abercrombie seemingly did just that. At least that is how the popular press reported the decisions. These reports, however, did not accurately characterize the cases. As described in a previous report,<sup>3</sup> the cases' holdings are narrow and do not really stand for the principles as reported.

Clarifying Pregnancy Accommodations

In Young, the employer, UPS, had a policy of offering light duty to employees who: (1) were hurt on the job; (2) lost their Department of Transportation certification to operate a vehicle; or (3) had disabilities covered by the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). The company did not, however, offer light duty to employees who were hurt outside of work (e.g., slipping in the shower, carrying a child) or who could not lift due to pregnancy.

<sup>1</sup> 135 S.Ct. 1338 (2015)

<sup>2</sup> 135 S.Ct. 2028 (2015)

<sup>3</sup> "The U.S. Supreme Court Rules in Favor of Employees in the Young and Abercrombie case: What Do They Really Hold," Cornell Hospitality Report, Vol 15, No. 20, Cornell Center for Hospitality Research, and Cornell Institute for Hospitality Labor and Employment Relations. .

In Young, the district court had granted summary judgment in favor of UPS, and the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit upheld the lower court's decision. Summary judgment is granted when there are no issues of material fact to be decided. Here, however, Young argued that some employees who did not fit into the any of the three categories listed above did, in fact, receive an accommodation. Such an allegation, if it had any merit, made summary judgment inappropriate, but the Supreme Court generally does not hear cases simply to correct lower courts' factual errors. Instead, the Court will take cases when there is split in the circuits' holdings or there is a legal issue that needs to be addressed. Citing cases from the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 9th circuits the Supreme Court cited a need to clarify the law with respect to pregnancy. Specifically, the issue was the meaning of the following statutory language: "[W]omen affected by pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical conditions shall be treated the same for all employment-related purposes... as other persons not so affected but similar in their ability or inability to work."<sup>4</sup>

The Court asked: "Does this clause mean that courts must compare workers only in respect to the work limitations that they suffer? Does it mean that courts must ignore all other similarities or differences between pregnant and non-pregnant workers? Or does it mean that courts, when deciding who the relevant 'other persons' [1349] are, may consider other similarities and differences as well? If so, which ones?"<sup>5</sup>

The Court seemingly answered these questions by relying on the 1973 McDonnell-Douglas precedent,<sup>6</sup> under which a plaintiff needed to prove that there was disparate treatment in order to prevail in a discrimination case. Under such a standard, an employer could provide light duty for ADA and work-related injuries, but not for off-work "injuries" like appendicitis or pregnancy. The problem was the Court then stated that an employer's denial of light duty to pregnant employees could not be because of cost or convenience. This is a radical departure from McDonnell-Douglas, and thus, the popular press reported that after Young employers had to provide light duty to pregnant employees.

The roundtable participants interpreted the case as being unclear and misleading, but relatively easy to comply with. As David Ritter of Barnes & Thornburg stated: "You have to ask yourself, why not provide light duty to pregnant employees?" The chief answer to this largely rhetorical question is that a company simply may not have light duty jobs. If that is the case, the participants agreed, an employer would not have to provide light duty to pregnant employees, ADA employees, or worker's compensation employees. Another, less solid reason for not wanting to provide light duty for pregnant employees is that if a work force is predominately young and female the employer may fear that there would be a rash of pregnant employees needing light duty. The participants agreed that this reason should not drive policy. Light duty becomes a problem when employees seek to stay on the reduced work load for many months and even years. By definition, pregnancy is short term. Thus, participants concluded that it was simply unlikely for there to be rash of long-term light-duty requests arising out of pregnancy. With that realization, the conclusion was simple: (1) if you don't have light duty you are safe with regards to denying pregnancy; and (2) if you have light duty—include pregnant people in that category.

<sup>4</sup> 42 U. S. C. §2000e(k), (emphasis added)

<sup>5</sup> Id.

<sup>6</sup> McDonnell-Douglas Corp. v. Green 411 U.S. 792 (1973)

Religious Accommodation

The Abercrombie case was another situation where the popular press misinterpreted the law. Abercrombie & Fitch's dress code prohibits "caps" and other headwear. Here the plaintiff, a Muslim, applied for a job while wearing a religious head scarf. The company did not ask the employee whether she needed a religious accommodation so that the "cap" policy would not apply to her. Instead, the company assumed that the head scarf was a religious requirement, and since it would violate the cap policy, the company refused to hire the plaintiff. Here, the roundtable participants were torn between the law and the reality of a changing diverse workforce. Both Ritter and Paul Wagner of Stokes, Wagner, advocated for religious tolerance and the elimination of cap policies that prohibit religious headwear. The HR professionals in the room concurred that a policy like this one was a relic that needed to be eliminated from the 21st workplace.

The lawyers, however, delved into the nuances of the case. The Court did not hold that cap policies are unlawful. Indeed, the Supreme Court in TWA v. Hardison held that religious accommodations are limited to that which would have no more than a de minimus cost on the employer. The Abercrombie court did not hold that the head scarf did not have less than a de minimus cost on the employer. Instead, the Court simply held that an employer cannot refuse to hire an employee because the company assumes the need for an accommodation and does not wish to provide it. Indeed, this case provides no guidance as to dress policies as they apply to religious accommodations, other than the fact that the EEOC is focused on this issue and that litigation associated with a dress code is expensive and difficult, if not impossible. The participants questioned how the employer could prove that the head scarf negatively affected business. The participants concluded from legal perspective that employers can deny these types of accommodations, but from a practical (i.e., the cost of defending them), ethical, and moral standpoint, it makes sense to accommodate.

The participants were in agreement, until other examples of "religious accommodations" muddied the waters. A flight attendant who played in a reggae band, claimed that having below-the-shoulder dreadlocks was part of his religion (the employer thought it was more to support the band's image), and a woman who belonged to the Church of Body Modification, demanded multiple face piercings. For the group the answer seemed uncomfortably clear—traditional dress of traditional religions should be accommodated, but tenets of non-traditional religions that violate policies need to be examined on a case-by-case basis. There is nothing more frustrating for management employment lawyers to advocate case-by-case analysis as it provides no guidance, but the issue is too new to have clear rules.

Roundtable chair David Sherwyn, director of the institute, opens the sessions.

The Joint Employer Doctrine

The next session concerned the joint-employer doctrine. Several weeks prior to the roundtable, the National Labor Relations Board decided the Browning-Ferris Industries (BFI) case, which dealt with leased employees. In BFI the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) held that BFI was the joint employer of those employees it leased from an employee supplier firm, Leadpoint. For the last 30 years the NLRB has found joint employment only when the putative employer exercised direct control over the employees in question. In BFI, the NLRB returned to its former standard under which an employer who had the authority to exercise control, even if it did not do so, was a joint employer.

The participants began the discussion by considering hospitality examples where it is common to lease employees and where the putative employer may now be a joint employer. For example, a hotel that leases out its valet service but demands that the employees wear uniforms of the hotel, abide by the hotel's dress code, and greet guests in a certain manner would likely be seen as the joint employer. If the hotel reserved the right to prohibit a certain employee from working at the hotel or limited the wages in any way, the putative employer would certainly be the joint employer.

David Rothfeld, of Kane, Kesler, weighs the issues involved in speedier union elections. His co-discussant is Paul Ades, senior vice president for labor relations for Hilton Worldwide.

The discussion then moved to the effects of BFI. The participants all agreed that it was naïve (and somewhat silly) for employers who lease employees that, as one participant stated, are part of the “belly of the hotel,” to believe that these employees would not be considered joint employees. The easy answer is to contract with “stand-up” suppliers who do not violate the law, but if they do, can indemnify the putative employer. This is not a problem for issues that are covered by insurance. Putative employers can require insurance and can be notified if the coverage lapses.

Certain claims, like wage and hour disputes, however, are not covered by insurance. Thus, putative employers need another mechanism to ensure that the supplier is in compliance and, if not, can pay the legal fees and damages. Even if that is the case, the BFI case resulted in a question of union organizing. The putative employer would have collective bargaining obligations under the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA). More troubling, the NLRA would prohibit the putative employer from cancelling the contract with the supplier if that cancellation was motivated by the firm's desire to avoid collective bargaining. In that case, the employer would be required to negotiate the decision and the resulting effects if the employer were to seek to cancel the contract for labor costs or any reason that the union could bargain over.

The participants agreed that after BFI it made sense to examine all contract employment to see whether it was necessary and worth the risk. Conversely, hotel operators at the table contended that when opening a new hotel, the operator simply does not have the people power and the knowledge to staff the property. In such situations leased labor is the only way to ensure staffing. Still the conclusion of the participants was that leasing employees in the “belly of the hotel” is risky (in terms of disavowing joint-employer status). Thus, the participants agreed that they, or their clients, were limiting such leasing and, when it cannot be avoided, are accepting joint-employer status and ensuring compliance with all labor and employment standards.

The conversation got more intense when we turned to joint-employment as it relates to franchising. John Gessner, general counsel of Front Burner Restaurant Group, is a franchisor. John explained that the business model of franchising would not allow joint employment. Franchising allows brands to expand without expending capital and without establishing the infrastructure necessary to manage the large workforce it takes to operate a labor-intensive business such as a restaurant. The infrastructure includes human resources managers, labor counsel, and regional operational managers. These people ensure compliance by being “on the ground” to ensure adherence to company policies and legal standards. In the franchising model, the franchisor owns and operates the store and the franchisor simply provides guidance. Indeed, the last 50 years of law have taught franchisors to avoid too much control. Now, the franchisor simply does not know whether it will be considered to be the joint employer and is in situation where it cannot afford to manage the franchisees, but could liable if there are legal violations.

At the time, and currently, the NLRB has numerous cases against McDonald’s where the NLRB claims McDonald’s is the joint employer. The participants agreed that an adverse ruling against McDonald’s could represent a sea change whereby the hospitality industry’s most prevalent model could be seriously compromised.

NLRB Elections

The final issue was the effect of the so-called “quickie” or ambush elections. As a way of background and oversimplification, unions organize either top-down or bottom up. Top-down occurs when the union and the employer agree to card-check neutrality agreements under which the employer agrees to stay neutral as the union attempts to organize, generally allows the union onto the property, and agrees to recognize the union when 50 percent + 1 of the employees signs a card stating a wish to have the union represent the employees.

The obvious question is why an employer would enter into such an agreement. The reasons include, but are not limited to (1) it is required by a collective bargaining agreement; (2) the local government requires such agreements before it will issue building permits; or (3) the employer and the union cut some sort deal where both sides benefit. The effect of card-check neutrality is significant—if the employees have the propensity to unionize under card-check they will.<sup>7</sup> Alternatively, with an election, the employer has a strong chance of prevailing. Consequently, Unite-Here, the world’s largest hotel union, announced almost 20 years ago that it would no longer organize bottom up with elections.

Rule changes. Under the NLRB rules, elections were to be held approximately 42 days after the filing of a petition. As of April 2015 the NLRB reduced the time of elections from 42 to no more than 21 days. Furthermore, they eliminated the pre-election litigation and held all issues until after the election if necessary. With the rules changed, the question for the panel was how the union did react, and how the employers should react. The answers are still being determined, but changes are on the way.

<sup>7</sup> I base this statement on the following analysis. Unions need 30 percent of the eligible voters to sign authorization cards to file an election petition. In the vast majority of cases, however, the union will not file unless it has cards from more than 60 percent of the voters. Since the union needs just one vote over 50 percent to be certified in a card-check, any bargaining unit that files for an election using the 60-percent standard would have been certified under card-check. Contrast that to the uneven results in the 26 petition filings in the analysis presented below. Elections are a better bet for employers than card-check.

David Ritter, partner in Barnes & Thornburg LLP, opened the discussion of the Supreme Court accommodation cases, joined by Barry Hartstein, shareholder, co-chair, EEO and diversity practice, Littler.

Number of days from petition to election, and union win rate

NAICS 721 "Accomodation" April 2015 - March 2016

Days	# Elections Held	# Union Wins	% Union Wins	% of Total Elections Held
1 to 10 Days	2	2	100.0%	4.1%
11 to 20 Days	14	10	71.4%	28.6%
21 to 30 Days	27	21	77.8%	55.1%
31 to 40 Days	3	1	33.3%	6.1%
41 to 50 Days	2	2	100.0%	4.1%
51 to 60 Days	0	0
61+ Days	1	1	100.0%	2.0%
Totals	49	37	75.5%	100.0%

NAICS 721 "Accomodation" April 2014 - March 2015

Days	# Elections Held	# Union Wins	% Union Wins	% of Total Elections Held
1 to 10 Days	0	0
11 to 20 Days	1	1	100.0%	2.5%
21 to 30 Days	6	3	50.0%	15.0%
31 to 40 Days	22	15	68.2%	55.0%
41 to 50 Days	7	6	85.7%	17.5%
51 to 60 Days	0	0
61+ Days	4	1	25.0%	10.0%
Totals	40	26	65.0%	100.0%

Source: Bloomberg BNA NLRB Elections database

To assess the effect of the rule change, subsequent to the roundtable we compared union elections in the hotel industry in two twelve-month time periods: April 1, 2014, to March 31, 2015, and April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016. Based on Bloomberg data, the number of days between petitions and elections decreased substantially. In 2014-2015, 82.5 percent of the elections took place more than 30 days after the petition, 15 percent occurred 21 to 30 days after the filing, and only 2.5 percent occurred within 20 days. Twelve months later, in 2015-2016, 12.2 percent of the elections occurred more than 30 days after filing, 55.5 percent occurred between 21 and 30 days, and 32.7 percent occurred within 20 days. This change in time is statically significant. The number of elections increased from 40 to 49, but that increase is not significant.

The other major change was the election activity by Unite Here, based on a declaration by its predecessor union, HERE, which was the largest hotel union in the world. The participants opined on whether HERE's mid-'90s pronouncement would hold, with the result that it would not participate in NLRB elections and would instead use its leverage to convince employers to sign card-check neutrality agreements. The participants noted that Unite Here did indeed retire from elections. The union filed 13 petitions in 2014-2105, and 26 petitions in 2015-2016. This is a statistically significant increase. Of the 13 petitions filed in 2014-2015, the union won 5, the hotel won 2, and 6 were unresolved. In 2015-2016, with 26 petitions, the union won 11, the hotel 6, and 9 were unresolved. The two years' results are not significantly different. Thus, the conclusions from the Unite Here and Bloomberg's industry data sets are clear: the number of petitions being filed has increased and the amount of days between the filing and the election have decreased, but the election results have not changed.

The lack of significantly different outcomes leads to the question about the effect of the change in the campaign period. Long accepted research holds that the number of days from petition to vote will have a significant effect on union win rates. The theory is that each day of the campaign period allows employers to identify the employees who are pro-union, pro-company, and fence sitters. The employer then campaigns to the fence sitters who know they have been identified. Those leaning to the company vote no, while those leaning to the union do not vote (since they have been identified). This theory concludes that the longer campaign period means the employer wins. In our two data sets, the unions' win rates increased from 65 percent to 75 percent (accommodations industry) and from 38 percent to 42 percent (Unite Here), but neither result is statically significant. Thus, this result could just be chance. There are several explanations for the anomalous results: (1) the sample is too small; (2) unions are withdrawing from elections they think they will likely lose and that skews the data; or (3) the unions have avoided elections for so long that they are not as skilled as they once were. Time and subsequent data should shed light on these results.

The Roundtable participants believed that the quick elections will not radically change the Unite Here strategy of top down organizing using card-check to bottom up organizing using elections. Still, everyone agreed that the organizing quiver has another type of arrow that Unite Here and other unions will use more frequently than they did before the change. In other words, NLRB elections are on the rise in the hotel industry and that increase should correspond to increase in the effectiveness of union organizers.

If this is the case, the question is what employers will do. Some employers are indifferent to unionization and thus, business as usual prevails. Other employers are anti-union, for either philosophical or business reasons. These employers are now engaging in the so-called 365-day-per-year campaign. Such campaigns are not what critics would call classic union busting. Instead, the participants emphasized that a successful 365 campaign is simply strong human resources. In other words, employers are ensuring that their wages are in line with those of non-union and union hotels in their competitive set. There is a new emphasis on communication and managers are being trained to treat people in a fair and equitable way. Hotels with poor human resources were always prime union targets. The target on those hotels just got bigger and easier to hit. Finally, because of the decrease in time between petitions and elections, the roundtable participants explained that employers who wish to avoid unionization must be ready to campaign at a moment's notice. These employers must have: (1) their team in place; (2) identified their preferred methods for communicating their positions; (3) an idea of where each employee stands; and (4) strong intelligence as to what the issues are driving the employees. ■

Danny Sikka, senior counsel for McDonald's, considers the NLRB's joint-employer ruling.

Ruth Seroussi, of counsel in Buchalter Nemer's labor and employment practice group.

Labor and Employment Law Roundtable Participants

October 4-5, 2015

Dave Sherwyn '86, JD '89, John & Melissa Ceriale Professor of Hospitality Human Resources, Academic Director of CIHLER and Stephen H. Weiss Presidential Fellow, Cornell University School of Hotel Administration, Chair

Paul Ades, Senior Vice President of Labor Relations, Hilton Worldwide, Inc.

Rachel Aleks, Assistant Professor, Cornell University ILR School

Robert Bernstein '91, Partner, Laner Muchin, Ltd.

Christopher Boone '05, MS '09, Assistant Professor, Cornell University School of Hotel Administration

John Ceriale P '16, P '18, Founder and President, Prospect Advisors

Dawn Chutkow PhD '09, Visiting Professor, Cornell University Law School

David Garland, Chair, Labor Steering Committee, Epstein Becker Green

John Gessner, Vice President and General Counsel, Front Burner Restaurants LP

Gregg Gilman '85, Partner, Co-chair, Labor and Employment, Davis & Gilbert LLP

Glenn Grindlinger '96, Partner, Fox Rothschild LLP

Kevin Hallock, Kenneth Kahn '69 Dean and Joseph Rich '80 Professor, Cornell University ILR School

Barry Hartstein '73, Shareholder, Co-chair, EEO and Diversity Practice, Littler

Michael Heise, Professor, Cornell University Law School

Richard Hurd, Associate Dean for External Relations, Professor of Labor Studies and Associate Director of CIHLER, Cornell University ILR School

Adam Klausner '84, JD '88, Senior Lecturer, Cornell University School of Hotel Administration

Jim Knudson, Director of Human Resources, Phillips Seafood Restaurants

Holly Lawson, Area Director of Human Resources, sbe

Kara Maciel, Chair, Labor, Employment Practice Group, Conn Maciel Carey PLLC

Alan Momeyer, Vice President, Human Resources, Loews Corporation

Harold Morgan '78, Senior Vice President Human Resources, White Lodging Services

Eduardo Peñalver, Allan R. Tessler Dean and Professor of Law, Cornell University Law School

David Ritter '80, Partner, Barnes & Thornburg LLP

Kamilla Rodrigues '08, Associate, Pashman Stein, P.C.

Sean Rogers, Assistant Professor, Cornell University School of Hotel Administration

David Rothfeld, Partner, Kane Kessler, P.C.

Stewart Schwab, Jonathan & Ruby Zhu Professor of Law, Cornell University Law School

Michael Selmi, Professor of Law, George Washington University

Ruth Seroussi '92, Of Counsel, BuchalterNemer PC

Daniel Sikka '01, Senior Counsel, Global Labor and Employment Law, McDonald's

Bruce Tracey, Professor of Human Resources Management, Cornell University School of Hotel Administration

Lisa Turano, Vice President of Legal and General Counsel, President of Turano Foundation, Turano Baking Company

Paul Wagner '86, JD '90, Adjunct Assistant Professor, Cornell University School of Hotel Administration

Center for Hospitality Research Publication Index

chr.cornell.edu

2016 Reports

Vol. 16 No. 17 Highlights from the 2016 Sustainable and Social Entrepreneurship Roundtable, by Jeanne Varney

Vol. 16 No. 16 Hotel Sustainability Benchmarking Index 2016: Energy, Water, and Carbon, by Eric Ricaurte

Vol. 16 No. 15 Hotel Profit Implications from Rising Wages and Inflation in the U.S., by Jack Corgel, Ph.D.

Vol. 16 No. 14 The Business Case for (and Against) Restaurant Tipping, by Michael Lynn, Ph.D.

Vol. 16 No. 13 The Changing Relationship between Supervisors and Subordinates: How Managing This Relationship Evolves over Time, by Michael Sturman, Ph.D. and Sanghee Park, Ph.D.

Vol. 16 No. 12 Environmental Implications of Hotel Growth in China: Integrating Sustainability with Hotel Development, by Gert Noordzy, Eric Ricaurte, Georgette James, and Meng Wu

Vol. 16 No. 11 The International Hotel Management Agreement: Origins, Evolution, and Status, by Michael Evanoff

Vol. 16 No. 10 Performance Impact of Socially Engaging with Consumers, by Chris Anderson, Ph.D., and Saram Han

Vol. 16 No. 9 Fitting Restaurant Service Style to Brand Image for Greater Customer Satisfaction, by Michael Giebelhausen, Ph.D., Evelyn Chan, and Nancy J. Sirianni, Ph.D.

Vol. 16 No. 8 Revenue Management in Restaurants: Unbundling Pricing for Reservations from the Core Service, by Sheryl Kimes, Ph.D., and Jochen Wirtz, Ph.D.

Vol. 16 No. 7 Instructions for the Food Preparation Scheduling Tool v2015, by Gary Thompson, Ph.D.

Vol. 16 No. 6 Compendium 2016

Vol. 16 No. 5 Executive Insights on Leader Integrity: The Credibility Challenge, by Tony Simons, Ph.D., with Kurt Schnaubelt, John Longstreet, Michele Sarkisian, Heather Allen, and Charles Feltman

Vol. 16 No. 4 Authenticity in Scaling the Vision: Defining Boundaries in the Food and Beverage Entrepreneurship Development Cycle, by Mona Anita K. Olsen, Ph.D., and Cheryl Stanley

Vol. 16 No. 3 Communication Planning: A Template for Organizational Change, by Amy Newman

Vol. 16 No. 2 What Guests Really Think of Your Hotel: Text Analytics of Online Customer Reviews, by Hyun Jeong “Spring” Han, Ph.D., Shawn Mankad, Ph.D., Nagesh Gavirneni, Ph.D., and Rohit Verma, Ph.D.

Vol. 16 No. 1 The Role of Service Improvisation in Improving Hotel Customer Satisfaction, by Enrico Secchi, Ph.D., Aleda Roth, Ph.D., and Rohit Verma, Ph.D.

2015 Reports

Vol. 15 No. 22 Have Minimum Wage Increases Hurt the Restaurant Industry? The Evidence Says No!, by Michael Lynn, Ph.D., and Christopher Boone, Ph.D.

Vol. 15 No. 21 Hotel Brand Conversions: What Works and What Doesn't, by Chekitan S. Dev, Ph.D.

Vol. 15 No. 20 The United States Supreme Court Rules in Favor of Employees in the Young and Abercrombie Cases: What Do They Really Hold?, by David Sherwyn, J.D., and David B. Ritter

Vol. 15 No. 19 The New Science of Service Innovation, Part 4: Select Research on People from the 2014 Cornell Hospitality Research Summit, by Cathy Enz, Ph.D., and Rohit Verma, Ph.D.

Vol. 15 No. 18 The New Science of Service Innovation, Part 3: Select Research on Technology from the 2014 Cornell Hospitality Research Summit, by Cathy Enz, Ph.D., and Rohit Verma, Ph.D.

Vol. 15 No. 17 The New Science of Service Innovation, Part 2: Select Research on Organizations from the 2014 Cornell Hospitality Research Summit, by Cathy Enz, Ph.D., and Rohit Verma, Ph.D.

Vol. 15 No. 16 The New Science of Service Innovation, Part 1: Select Research on Data from the 2014 Cornell Hospitality Research Summit, by Cathy Enz, Ph.D., and Rohit Verma, Ph.D.

Vol. 15 No. 15 Adopting the Code: Human Trafficking and the Hospitality Industry, by Michele Sarkisian

Vol. 15 No. 14 How the Deepwater Horizon Oil Spill Damaged the Environment, the Travel Industry, and Corporate Reputations, by Alex Susskind, Ph.D., Mark Bonn, Ph.D., and Benjamin Lawrence, Ph.D.

Advisory Board

---

Syed Mansoor Ahmad, Vice President, Global Business Head for Energy Management Services, Wipro EcoEnergy

Marco Benvenuti MMH '05, Cofounder, Chief Analytics and Product Officer, Duetto

Scott Berman '84, Principal, Real Estate Business Advisory Services, Industry Leader, Hospitality & Leisure, PwC

Erik Browning '96, Vice President of Business Consulting, The Rainmaker Group

Bhanu Chopra, Founder and Chief Executive Officer, RateGain

Susan Devine '85, Senior Vice President—Strategic Development, Preferred Hotels & Resorts

Ed Evans '74, MBA '75, Executive Vice President & Chief Human Resources Officer, Four Seasons Hotels and Resorts

Kevin Fliess, Vice President of Product Marketing, CVENT, Inc.

Chuck Floyd, P '15, P '18 Global President of Operations, Hyatt

R.J. Friedlander, Founder and CEO, ReviewPro

Gregg Gilman ILR '85, Partner, Co-Chair, Labor & Employment Practices, Davis & Gilbert LLP

Dario Gonzalez, Vice President—Enterprise Architecture, DerbySoft

Linda Hatfield, Vice President, Knowledge Management, IDEAS—SAS

Bob Highland, Head of Partnership Development, Barclaycard US

Steve Hood, Senior Vice President of Research, STR

Sanjeev Khanna, Vice President and Head of Business Unit, Tata Consultancy Services

Josh Lesnick '87, Executive Vice President and Chief Marketing Officer, Wyndham Hotel Group

Faith Marshall, Director, Business Development, NTT DATA

David Mei '94, Vice President, Owner and Franchise Services, InterContinental Hotels Group

David Meltzer MMH '96, Chief Commercial Officer, Sabre Hospitality Solutions

Nabil Ramadhan, Group Chief Human Capital Officer, Human Resources, Jumeirah Group

Cornell Hospitality Report
Vol. 16, No. 15 (July 2016)

© 2016 Cornell University. This report may not be reproduced or distributed without the express permission of the publisher.

Cornell Hospitality Report is produced for the benefit of the hospitality industry by The Center for Hospitality Research at Cornell University.

Christopher A., Director
Carol Zhe, Program Manager
Glenn Withiam, Executive Editor
Kate Walsh, Interim Dean, School of Hotel Administration

Center for Hospitality Research
Cornell University
School of Hotel Administration
389 Statler Hall
Ithaca, NY 14853

607-254-4504
chr.cornell.edu

---

Umar Riaz, Managing Director—Hospitality, North American Lead, Accenture

Carolyn D. Richmond ILR '91, Partner, Hospitality Practice, Fox Rothschild LLP

David Roberts ENG '87, MS ENG '88, Senior Vice President, Consumer Insight and Revenue Strategy, Marriott International, Inc.

Rakesh Sarna, Managing Director and CEO, Indian Hotels Company Ltd.

Berry van Weelden, MMH '08, Director, Reporting and Analysis, priceline.com's hotel group

Adam Weissenberg '85, Global Sector Leader Travel, Hospitality, and Leisure, Deloitte

Rick Werber '83, Senior Vice President, Engineering and Sustainability, Development, Design, and Construction, Host Hotels & Resorts, Inc.

Dexter Wood, Jr. '87, Senior Vice President, Global Head—Business and Investment Analysis, Hilton Worldwide

Jon S. Wright, President and Chief Executive Officer, Access Point Financial

Advisory Board

---

Paul Ades, Senior Vice President, Labor Relations, Hilton Worldwide

Bob Alter, President, Seaview Investors, LLC

Ilene Berman, Partner, Taylor English Duma LLP

Debbie Brown, Vice President of Human Resources, The Americas, Four Seasons Hotels and Resorts

Laura FitzRandolph, Chief Human Resources Officer and Assistant General Counsel, Interstate Hotels & Resorts

David Garland, Chair, Labor and Employment Practice, Epstein Becker Green

Gregg Gilman, Partner/Co-Chair, Labor & Employment Practice Group, Davis & Gilbert LLP

Michael Gray, Partner, Jones Day

Keith Grossman, SVP, Deputy General Counsel, Starwood Hotels and Resorts

Barry Hartstein, Shareholder, Co-chair EEO & Diversity Practice, Littler

Danielle Hawkins, Senior Manager, Deloitte Consulting LLP

Kenneth Kahn, President, LRP Publications

Michael Lebowich, Partner, Labor & Employment Law Department, Proskauer

Kara Maciel, Chair, Labor, Employment Practice Group, Epstein Becker Green

Edward Mady, Regional Director of West Coast USA and General Manager, The Beverly Hills Hotel and Bungalows

Alan Momeyer, Vice President of Human Resources, Loews Corporation

Harold Morgan, Senior Vice President and Chief Human Resources Officer, White Lodging

Frank Muscolina, Vice President, Corporate Labor Relations, Caesars Entertainment Corporation

Cornell Hospitality Labor and Employment Report

Vol. 16, No. 18 (August 2016)

© 2016 Cornell University.

This report may not be reproduced or distributed without the express permission of the publisher.

Cornell Labor and Employment Reports are produced for the benefit of the hospitality industry by The Cornell Institute for Hospitality Labor and Employment Relations at Cornell University.

David Sherwyn, Director

Richard Hurd, Associate Director

Erica Heim, Program Manager

Glenn Withiam, Executive Editor

Kate Walsh, Interim Dean, School of Hotel Administration

Published in conjunction with

Cornell University Center for Hospitality Research

School of Hotel Administration

Statler Hall

Ithaca, NY 14853

Phone: 607-255-6574

www.cihler.cornell.edu

---

Larry Regan, President, Regan Development Corporation

Carolyn Richmond, Partner, Fox Rothschild LLP

Steve Rimmer, Partner, PwC

David Ritter, Partner, Barnes & Thornburg LLP

David Rothfield, Partner, Labor and Employment Department, Kane Kessler, PC

Ruth Seroussi, Counsel, Buchalter Nemer P.C.

Greg Smith, EVP, Human Resources, Commune Hotels

Celeste Yeager, Shareholder, Littler